As the 2016 #presidential #primaries conclude it is clear that #technology, and #socialmedia in particular, is a dominant force in #politics. Although

Facebook, Instagram, and Snapchat, the social media service remains top of mind by candidates, the media, and voters. Mainstream candidates relied on time-tested corporate fundraising tactics. Insurgent campaigns—Sanders and Trump especially—used Twitter to raise awareness and raise funds to great effect.'

Election Tech: Why social media is more powerful than advertising - TechRepublic

In a confusing and unconventional presidential campaign primary cycle, one clear trend emerged: Data-driven marketing is the future of politics and business.
